FULLY EXPLAINS OPERATION OF SOCIAL CREDIT

(By o Local Social Credit Booster) The great majority of those who oppose Social Credit do so through lack of understanding or enlightinci of understanding or enugationent. There are, of course, some who oppose it from selfish reasons, but such people are comparatively few in number and consist largely few in number and consist largely of those wao are now in centrol of our present financial system, or the very rich and the few who are mean enough to do the bidding of their financial masters for a price.

It is for the benefit of those who have not the time or opportunity or perhaps the inclination to study the philosophy of the new econamics that this article is written, and ig, the hope—that some points in the Social Credit system snay be made clearer to them.

To begin with, there is only one ment. There are, of course, some the hope-that some points in the Social Credit system may be made clearer to them.

To begin with, there is only one Social Credit System and it, was founded by Mijore C. H. Douglas. The system, however, is very flexible and can be used under many different plans. In fact a different plans in fact a different plans and the system, the system of the country or section of the country that may be made by anybody that thoroughly understands the system and can figure out the best way of applying it to the country or section of the country under consideration. Mr. Aberbart, who is a real student and has real mathematical ability should be an ideal man to make a plan for Alberts. He knows the Douglas knows it himself, and he knows conditions in Alberta much better. But it doesn't matter as will be checked and if necessary casced by Major Douglas before it is adopted by any government. The important things in Social Credit are the principles upon which he system is built, and if those art found to be without fault no one hould condemn it, because the man in Alberta who is toisemost in pre-claiming it, differs with many in his religious and political beliefs. Such smallness of mind would greatly re-tard progress.

The system arises from a belief smallness of mind would greatly reard progress.

The system arises from a belief that Holy Willey was all wrong in his assumption that God created one for Heaven and ten for Hell and for his glory, That it was not God's purpose that man should suffer, but that all should enjoy the bountful provision he has made for their temporal as well as their eternal welfare.

Acting on this belief, Major Doug las as an engineer, began to study rything that the people could reaeverything that the people could rea-sonably desire and yet there was suf-fering and want on every hand. He soon discovered that the whole trouble Mas in the distributing system swhich is in reality the financial system and his engineering mind immediately began to work on another system that would overcome the difficulty.

that would overcome the difficulty.

Like all good engineers his first care was to get solid bottom for the foundation of his structure and here is what he decided upn:

1. National money.

2. National dividends.

National dividends.
 A just price.
 You will see at once that the bedrock is democracy and the foundation plers, or principles, are ownership eco-operation and justice On these three principles he builds the system of Social Credit.

The money, therefore, belongs to the banks and the mation is obliged to berrow it from them or of course, has to most the act to the banks and the mation is obliged to be the bank and the mation is obliged to be the product of the banks and the mation is obliged to be the product of the product of benefit of the whole nation and no for only a few people. He, therefore, makes ownership of credit which is the basis of ownership of money, the lirst principle in his Social Gedit ischeme. There are four things about shich we do not need to argue a hey are self evident:

(1) That consumption cannot column long without production.

(2) That production cannot coninue long without consumption, i.e., in outlet. or only a few people. He, therefore

- (3) That the two should go hand in nand, or in other words, they should and, or in other words, tracy should also, or in other words, tracy should be co-operate.

(4) The use of power driven machinery has made it possible, under the present system for production, to leave consumption far behind, and without its aid production must stop, resulting in a it up of business which is ceally the cause of the depression. Major Douglas in his A and B Theorem gives clear and ample proof that the reason consumption has been the treatment of the consumption has been in its trail to buy the goods it has produced at the price it demands for them.

Benring in mind that he first proposes to get control of the national credit, he new proposes to use that credit to subsidise consumption by means of dividends to consumers, so they will be able to co-operate with producers by taking delivery of goods as and when produced and thus keep industry constantly in motion. Co-operation is, therefore, his second principle, and this co-operation is made possible by the use that can be made of national credit when, it is conned by the nation.

The application of these two principles, however, would estil leave the consumer open to exploitagion by the producer or dealer. To make this impossible the principle of justice is required and he makes it the third and final pier in the foundation of his system. He calls it the figure rand the distributor allike. No injustice can be done to any one under this system.

VAUGHAN S. KIMPTON LIBERAL CANDIDATE GLEICHEN RIDING

Following the reading and adopting of the report of the secretary, treasurer, Mr. C. R. Walrod tendered his resignation on account of pressure of work, owing to his candidacy in the federal election and T. J. Kildee was chosen to succeed Mr. Walrod as secretary-treasurer.
W. R. Howson gave a detailed account of the electoral fields and the candidates already appointed. These men cover a wide variety of work and interests, and will certainly make for a better representation of the people as a whole.
The chief basiness of the affermoon was the selection of the candidates. Aff. Kimpton was proposed by Mr. Mallet of Këema and seconded by H. Mallet of Këema and seconded by H. Groves of Sirathmore, no cher nominations being made, Mr. Kimpton was elected by acclamation. In a brief address expressing his appreciation of the honor done him, Mr. Kimpton declared himself a Liberal, a McGoer-Howom Liberal and strengthened the confidence already felt for him.

The evening meeting was well attended and very informative address.

Dr Gershaw paid a tribute to the sincereity of Mackennie King. He hoped the officers of the Central Bank would devise a sound policy of currency to give greater purchasing power to the people. He atreased the need of reduction in tartiffs, reciprocity with the U.S. as our logical market. Old age pensions to be given at 55 and thus release more positions for young men and women; pensions for be help of the blind, disabled soldiers and help in education given to bright students. Dr. Gershaw said high tartiffs are stranging trade. He closed with a strong plea for squal copportunity for all.

A very clear exposition of the monetary system was given by Mr. Churchill of the C.C.I., Calgary. It is likely this address will be printed and circulated generally, hence will omit Durther comment of this able exposition. In opening his clear the printed structure of the conference in Calgary and said the monetary reform necessary will be brought about by youth. The older generation must give all possible help to enable them to carry on until emancipation is completed and life for confidence of the possible help to enable them to carry on until emancipation is completed and life for condition of want to plenty. This is the big job for all; to remove those causes of depression and so serve humanity.

Joy is not an ordered thing, Portioned day by day, This much happiness for Spring, That, when storms will stray.

Rather, it is like a bird Singing, who knows why? By what winds of fancy stirred Into melody?

Joy is careless where it dwells, How it comes or goes; Who can say what charm impels Song that heavenward flows?

I had thought my joy was spent, Fluttered from my hand; I had sought to find content In a silent land.

Then upon a golden day, Fairest, loveliest, Joy rose, like a lark in May, Singing in my breast!

Amusing Episode of Visit Or Royalty

136 Years Ago
To-day the members of the British Royal family are most democratic. In celebrating the Royal Jubilee the British people feel their King and Queen are not only their sovereigns but their friends And if this detracts in any way from the romantic atmosphere of royalty it adds in finitely more to the human relationship—a deeper and warmer bond than the merely remote and picturesque.

We could never imagine our King George and Queen Mary permitting such sittled behaviour among their personal friends as was exacted 150 years ago by George III. when he paid what was presumably a friendly all on Mrs. Delany. The visit is thus amusingly described by Agnes Reppiler in her charming book "To Think

"When the king entered Mrs. Delany's parlour, all its occupants except the hostess backed respectfully to the wall, and stood there at attention. Then Miss Post backed out to the wall, and stood there at attention. Then Miss Post backed out of the door and brought in two extra candles which she placed on the tables; tacked out a second time and brought in two more candles which she placed on the planoforte; backed out a third time, and brought in His Majesty's tea on a large salver with larger and cream, bread and butter, cake and a napkin. While he drank it she returned to her station by the wall. When he had finished, she took his cup, backed out of the room a fourth time and brought him a fresh supply. It was well she did not drink statem cups in Dr. Johnson's fashion, or Miss Post's legs would have given away under her. Of course no ne partook of tea with the king. He drank it is solenn state. . and took his departure, leaving the company overwhelmed by a profound sense of his condescension."

Confidence

Confidence is the bedrock on which human society rests. The entire world in all its varietà activities is motivated by considence. Destroy considence and our civilization would disappear. It has been long accepted as a truism that there is in life but one abroliuc certainty, which is death. And, says one writer, all other activities, to a large extent, are dependent upon considence for their being.

There is no word in our harpungs that is more powerful in its full manual control of the practical an agency to accomplish our desires or to transmute our hopes into resulties than that of confidence. It has been said that it is a plant of slow growth. Yet it is one that can be untrured by individuals and prope the full fruit-age with little effort. It is a kin to fath in that faith in a particular proposit of application. Sometimes it's an outgrowth of reason, sometimes instinct, but however acquired it is, as stated in our opening sentence, the bedrock on which human society rests.

A home is established on confidence, the confidence a man find a woman have in each other which beggets respect and love; confidence which children have in each other which beggets respect and love; confidence which children in turn which they repose in their offspring. Lacking confidence, a home would be impossible.

A successful business can only be built up and maintained where there is confidence, the confidence which one partner reposes in another, which text to this term have in their managing executive, which an employer exist of the term have in their managing executive, which an employer exist of the term have in their managing executive, which an employer exist of the term have in their managing executive, which an employer exist of the term have in their managing executive, which an employer exist of the term have in their managing executive, which an employer exist confidence, the confidence in the middle and the hard and the series of the confidence.
